I do not believe the DOJ is interested in protecting consumer's and fair competitive practices. Rather, the ongoing, relentless actions of the DOJ against Microsoft certainly appears to be in response to the greed of big business - specifically Microsoft's competitors who are seeking government intervention to squelch their competition.

Also, the actions of Microsoft's competitors and the DOJ directly affects the stock market and the national economy. Millions of Americans believe in Microsoft and its products and have invested in the company. The future economic strength of the country is most certainly affected by stock market, and the future of millions of Americans who have invested in Microsoft for today and for their future retirement is in great jeopardy.

The actions of the DOJ in response to Microsoft's competitors has certainly created doubts in the minds of millions of Americans. Whose interests is the DOJ really serving?
